French Continue to Move Forward Slowly in Champagne District Near Rheims.

GERMANS GIVE UP TRENCHES

Lose Artillery Support Between had stormed the city. Perthes and Somme—Joffre Scores Near St. Mihiel.

PARIS, Feb. 24.-While the French keep pounding away at the German left center between Rheims and the Meuse river, the Germans continue their assaults against the British at the left end of the ailies' battle front. On the North sea coast the Germans succeeded in making a gain, and the French war office admits fighting is taking place west of Lombaertsyde.

Between Ypres and the French front the Germans have been making furious drives against the British trenches, the infantry attacks being varied by terrific artillery fire.

In the Champagne district, between Rheims and the Argonne forest the French continue to move forward slowly. The Germans have been compelled to abandon three of their first line trenches and were driven out of two other lines of field works at the point of the bayonet.
